

The vertical garden

In our opinion, however, sustainability also means that a building has more than one use. The functional requirements for buildings are constantly changing these days. That's why we not only wanted to turn a building into a house to work in, but also a place for everyone. This is why the buffer zones function simultaneously as a vertical park and garden. Via ramps it is possible to walk through the 260 meter high building up to the roof garden. A 260 meter high park. A park that cools the building and invites you to linger. In addition, some floors adjacent to the park are exclusively used for public purposes. Cafes, shops and restaurants are located here. The building is not only an office building, it is a vertical green experience.

